VIRGINIA'S SURNAMES A study of the family nomenclature I and daughters of the colonial and Revointerest, especially concerning that of Virginia from her first settlement to the present time. Like those of England, present time. Like those of England, the surnames of many families who first landed on our shores have undergone changes or become almost completely obliterated by admixture with foreign titles. Yet this has not been so sudden or varied as even the Norwegian, Germanic and Celife of early England, or chose of Normandy and the Saxon period which followed after. Virginia derives all of her old family names direct from England, with a good percentage of French Huguenots and Scotch-Irish, whose descendants are with us to this day. Yet, in searching early records, there are many missing of the Jamestown settlers and those of lower Virginia; or of the few that remain have been gradually distorted from their originalty.

The early English surnames, as brought The early English surnames, as brought over by the first emigrants, were derived from five sources—1. Baptismal or personal names; 2. Local surnames; 3. Occupation surnames; and 5. Sobriquet nicknames. At Official surnames; 4. Occupation surnames; sand 5. Sofriquet nicknames. At first there was but a single name, as those in the Bible-John, Peter, Paul, etc.—but gradually came a patronymic, such as "Bar-Jonas," "Simon of Cyrne," "Judas-Barnabus." These were founed from place of living, occupation, or some peculiar characteristic. In the eleventh and twelfth centuries, however, a change took place over the whole of greater clyllized Europe. It was found that some more fixed name was required to distanguish and maintain a current identity, hence, what was an occasional custom became a fixed and general practice in the use of some distinguishing sobriquet, so that names began to form a fixture, such as Johnson, for "John's son," Williamson, for "William's son," heing the Saxon desinence.

Then came the Le, the Ap, the At or Atte, the Fitz or fils, etc., to connect the heing the Saxon desinence.

Then came the Le, the Ap, the At or Atte, the Fitz or fils, etc., to connect the designation—such as "Williamson-Atte-Madow," "John-le-Clerk," "Robert-Ap-Worth," "Fitz-Patrick," etc., etc. At last, about the fourteenth or lifteenth centuries, these connecting links began to be dropped, the name assuming its fixture, such as William Mead, John Clerk or Clark, Robert Apworth, John Fitz-patrick, etc., etc., many of which were brought over to this country.

Among those who first settled at Henricopolis and Coxendale, located not far from the present site of Richmond, being on both sides of the river below Rock-etts, we find the following: Patterson, Norton, Villiard, Porry, Studson, Sheffield, Plower, Morgan, Edwards, Proctor, Tracy, Weston, Price, Neinmount, Barkly, Poulton, Read, Aukland, Griffin, Tindale and Layden, Many of these we recognize to-day as very old English surnames—Patterson being derived from "Patten's son," as found in 1406; Perry, from "Perry man," or "Pear man" (a fruit dealer), time of Elizabeth; Morgan, fruit dealer), time of Elizabeth; Morgan, fruit dealer), time of Elizabeth; Morgan, fruit dealer, time of Elizabeth; Morgan, fruit dealer, time of Elizabeth; Morgan, from "Perry man," or "Pear man" (a fruit dealer), time of Elizabeth; Morgan, from "Mor" or "More," and "gain," as found in the witty epigram on Sir Thomas

Taking the names of settlers in the counties of Henrico, Hanover, Goochland, Louisa, Fluvanna and Albemarie from 1700 to 1806, we have the names of English, Scotch, Iirsh and French families more intimately blended by marriage, location or public prominence, thus making them pronounced and fixed. Such were the Madisons, Pleusants, Buchansans, Saunders, Wood, Mosby, Randolph, Jones, Meriwagthen Turpin, Payne, Poindexter, Boiling, Lightfoot, Winston, Fontaine, Walker, Hunter, Miller, Patton, Minor, Duke, Brock, Gooch, Dabney and many others, all of whom can be traced to their English origin, leading back into many centuries.

As we enter the nineteenth century, especially after the Revolutionary period, when emigration from the North and for-eign countries entered the State, Virginia surgames became nucle work. ginia surnames became much more numerous and varied, purtaking of German, Irish, Dutch and other nationalities which became amalgamated with the already established families formed. These have now become, as of the "manor born," and recognized as among the true F. F. V. 's; such we class the McCails, Cowling, Riddick, Taliaferro, McGuire, McRobert, McClurge, Janney, Kennedy, O'Brien, Van Doren, Cowardin, and the like; these, with still later impertations, as Janour, Langhorne, Babcock, Ingersoll, Van Peters, Halsinger, Wertenbaker and other more modern names, have filled our directories with a nomenclature entirely distinct from the colonial period.

By permission of The Times-Disptach it is proposed to give under its genealogical column a short sketch each week of some of the old historic familiae, whose names are still familiar to us, and representation, and had a host of friends. He leaves three sons and three daughters, his corrigin, history and noble deeds, as recorded during the early struggles of our land, read now like some brilliant romance, ever to be perpetuated and handed down to coming ages by the true sons ginia surnames became much more nu-merous and varied, partaking of German,

ARRESTED FOR PASSING COUNTERFEIT SILVER

(Special to The Times-Dispatch.) NEWPORT NEWS, VA., Aug. 12 W. Lyons and William Stanford are held W. Lyons and William Stanford are held in jail here on the charge of passing counterfeit money. It is charged that the men went into a store and asked for a two dollar bill in exchange for silver. In the silver offered in exchange for the bill were three spurious quarters, according to the charge.

The men tell conflicting stories, claiming Norfolk, Philadelphia and San Francisco as their homes. The authorities at Norfolk communicated with the police here, asking that the men be held.
